Legal Majority Age

I represent concerned citizens who are becoming adults. Does adulthood come at the age of 18 or does it come at the age of 21? When the youth of America reaches the age of 18, they are all responsible for their actions in law and in society. In the United States young men between the ages of 18 and 25 are forced to register for the Selective Service which makes them eligible to be drafted into the military. At the age of 18 young people are considered legal adults; however these young people under the age of 21 are not legally allowed to drink, nor are they thought of adults in many cases such as claiming independence in federal financial age. The terms of financial aid makes it very difficult to be considered as an independent under the age of 22. If young people are held responsible for their actions, why is not legal for them to drink and be granted every privilege given to other older adults? I feel that the age of majority with all of its privileges and responsibilities should come at one age. Whether the legal age of adulthood comes at the age of 18 or 21, the group of people that are that specific age and older should be responsible for their actions, enroll in the selective services, as well as be legally capable of drinking. The age of majority is very cloudy and should be defined.
